In May 1945, three B-32s assigned to the 386th Bombardment Squadron arrived at Clark Field in the Philippines. On May 29, the B-32 flew its first combat mission against a Japanese supply ...

In reality, the B-32 was a fall-back aircraft in the event that the complex, technology-laden B-29 did not meet its expectations as the nation's premier heavy bomber of World War II.

Summary: The B-29 Superfortress is famous for its role in the atomic bombings, but it had a lesser-known rival: the Consolidated B-32 Dominator. Developed as a backup for the B-29, the...

The Consolidated B-32 Dominator (Consolidated Model 34) was an American heavy strategic bomber built for the United States Army Air Forces during World War II. A B-32 was involved in the last air ...

B32 to WILLIAMSBURG BRIDGE PLAZA No scheduled service for the B32 to WILLIAMSBURG BRIDGE PLAZA at this time.

On August 18, 1945, a pair of Dominators from the 368th Bombardment Squadron flew to Tokyo on a photographic mission, where they were attacked and claimed two Japanese fighters shot ...

Both the B-29 and B-32 used Wright's powerful but persnickety R-3350 Duplex-Cyclone 18-cylinder radial engines, driving four large four-bladed propellers. Both were fully-pressurized, could carry up ...
